The Man Who Had Three Arms - Wikipedia

The sentence refers to two students, James and John, who are required by an English test to describe a man who had suffered from a cold in the past. John writes "The man had a cold", which the teacher marks incorrect, while James writes the correct "The man had had a cold".

Since James's answer was right, it had had a better effect on the teacher. The sentence is easier to understand with added punctuation and emphasis:
