A Happy Death - Wikipedia

The Stranger and Happy Death deal with a murder by the main character, Patrice Merseult. While there are similarities, substantial differences also separate the two stories. Camus expert, Roger Quil- lot explicated these differences. He wrote, "Mersault is ... the younger brother of Mersault" [in The Stranger] (165).

One piece of evidence that leads Alison Bechdel to believe that her father committed suicide is the copy of Camus's A Happy Death that he was reading at the time of his death. The French philosopher's first novel is about deliberately creating one's own happiness in life even as the protagonist is dying from consumption.

A Happy Death was Camus' first novel and was clearly the precursor to his most famous work, The Stranger, published in 1942. The main character in A Happy Death is named "Patrice Mersault", similar to The Stranger's "Meursault"; both are French Algerian clerks who kill another man.

Summary of A Happy Death - Albert camus

This book, published after Camus's untimely death, has been alleged to be an early edition of THE STRANGER. A HAPPY DEATH is a longer read than THE STRANGER, but goes into a lot more depth as the main character undergoes an existential journey. Once the novel concludes, it is immediately apparent why it was titled as so.

A Happy Death was written in the two years before The Stranger (1936-37) and we do have Mersault as the main character in each case. However, Happy Death has Patrice Mersault, presumably not the Mersault of The Stranger who has no first name.
