A Manual For Cleaning Women - Stories 1-10 Summary & Analysis

In the title story, “A Manual for Cleaning Women,” the narrator observes, “Rich people in cars never look at people on the streets, at all. Poor ones always do...in fact it sometimes seems they’re just driving around, looking at people on the streets.

—Lydia Davis, New Ohio Review, on the story A Manual for Cleaning Women "[The stories] are told in a conversational voice and they move with a swift and often lyrical economy. They capture and communicate moments of grace and cast a lovely, lazy light that lasts.
