Both the blame and the credit for capitalism have often been placed at the feet not of an economist, but rather a sixteenth-century Christian theologian named John Calvin. Calvin's belief in predestination and other tenets embraced by aggressive capitalists, is seen as giving the theological justification for a Protestant vision that propelled economic growth in Europe, Britain and, eventually, North America.

A Brief History of John Calvin John Calvin was born in France in 1509 and was raised as a Roman Catholic. His father initially intended John to enter the priesthood, but realized later in life that there was more money to be made in law, and so in 1525, sent John to become a lawyer.

John Calvin's (1509-64) theology, as expounded in his definitive work, the Institutes of the Christian Religion, and in his topical theological treatises, biblical commentaries and sermons, may be accurately described as a lifelong meditation on the law of God.
