November 6th marked the end of the election season, but only the start of activism around oil and gas. It would be reasonable to assume oil and gas professionals would revel in the victory over proposition 112, the controversial setback measure), even while pro-health and safety activists continue their work, but you would be wrong.

In Activism, Inc., Dana Fisher does not simply conclude that canvassing (or the outsourcing of canvassing) has tradeoffs for the progressive community as it, like all organizing strategies, surely does. Rather, she tells us that the outsourcing of canvassing is “strangling progressive politics in America,” that it “chews up” and “spits out” young progressive activists, and that it “sometimes ... hands victory to the other side.”
