Abstract After the vote was won, the suffrage societies had to set a new agenda. The Pankhursts' Women's Party concentrated on winning the war and on securing what they saw as a patriotic peace, but their new incarnation was short-lived. Following its 1919 demise, the Pankhursts set themselves a new course that had little to do with the vote.

After a first count of votes, Tilden won 184 electoral votes to Hayes' 165, with 20 votes unresolved. These 20 electoral votes were in dispute in four states: in the case of Florida, Louisiana, and South Carolina, each party reported its candidate had won the state, while in Oregon one elector was declared illegal (as an "elected or appointed official") and replaced.
