Programming is learning to solve problems using the right tools for the job. If you just learn one framework, you're only learning one way of thinking about problem solving. I mentioned previously that bootcamp graduates are often done a disservice when programs teach them one framework, trapping them in that framework's conventions.

I have similar issues. I use rEFInd bootloader but I have not had any issues until I got a samsung t5 ssd (usb c not thunderbolt 3), and when I plug it in preboot my computer will not boot with eGPU (Aorus 1070). But if I plug in the SSD after I have logged in and the eGPU is working, I do not have a problem. But if I unplug it I crash.
