Carrots and Sticks Don't Work - Build a Culture of Employee Engagement with the Principles of RESPECT™ It's not often that a business book starts with a Mae West quote, but this one is a worthwhile exception.

Lesson 3: Use one, gigantic stick to get it together, instead of fiddling around with many little carrots. Once you know that we spend a lot more of our time avoiding losing than chasing the next win, you'll also understand why sticks (=punishments) work better than carrots (=rewards).

The title says it all: Carrots and Sticks Don't Work. Reward and recognition programs can be costly and inefficient, and they primarily reward employees who are already highly engaged and productive performers.

Carrots and Sticks Don't Work decries motivation based around financial incentives, considering these programs brittle and temporary. Instead, author Marciano suggests that people are most motivated when they feel respected by their organization and feel respect for their work .

The carrot and stick approach does not work, ever. The carrot isn't worth the effort, and the stick portion really means you did not earn a carrot. I don't know of anyone who managed like this. Deming should have said something like "It's been a long day and I'm tired. Thanks for your help, it's greatly appreciated."
