F1G5XF - MARLEE DAYTON

Charlie Parker forever changed the performance and writing of jazz music. He developed a new style of jazz called "bebop." It was different from the dance or "swing" style that was popular for years. Performers of bebop left the traditional musical melody and played a song freely, with the music and rhythm that was felt at the time.

Starting with his New York-based recordings of 1944 and 1945 and his concurrent appearances on 52nd street, the jazz press increasingly took notice of his activities, thus making the biographer's job somewhat easier.
