----- EXCERPT FROM BOOK The attacker lifted his weapon in the air above his head. Mia saw his eyes were no longer red, but a shade of yellow instead. She didn't know what that meant. He drove his blade into the sand inches away from the man on the ground. The Tharloin attacker leaned close blocking the view of the crowd that let out another gasp. Mia could see from the box that he had missed the stab. The man on the ground nodded. Then, he closed his eyes and slumped to his side. The attacker pulled his blade out of the sand and held it over his head. The crowd cheered, thinking they had just witnessed the kill. As they hauled the last man away, the winner lifted his bright white eyes on the box. She expected him to look on them with green, but his eyes didn't change. The slits of his eyes were a little wider than the other Tharloins. His skin was a little darker blue than others she had seen. Mia wondered if that was from days of fighting bare chested in the sun. He looked the women over. His eyes lighted on Mia.

She wanted to look away in fear, but her eyes were drawn to him and she couldn't seem to look away at all. He nodded and pointed at her as he dropped his weapon. An attendant pulled her chain and handed her over the railing. The crowd cheered. The warrior took her chain in his fist without a word and led her away. On the twenty-fifth anniversary of the publication of her classic Leadership and the New Science, bestselling author Margaret Wheatley once again turns to the new science of living systems to help leaders persevere in a time of great turmoil. I know it is possible for leaders to use their power and influence, their insight and compassion, to lead people back to an understanding of who we are as human beings, to create the conditions for our basic human qualities of generosity, contribution, community and love to be evoked no matter what. I know it is possible to experience grace and joy in the midst of tragedy and loss.

I know it is possible to create islands of sanity in the midst of wildly disruptive seas. I know it is possible because I have worked with leaders over many years in places that knew chaos and breakdown long before this moment. And I have studied enough history to know that such leaders always arise when they are most needed. Now it's our turn.

----- EXCERPT FROM BOOK The attacker lifted his weapon in the air above his head. Mia saw his eyes were no longer red, but a shade of yellow instead. She didn't know what that meant. He drove his blade into the sand inches away from the man on the ground. The Tharloin attacker leaned close blocking the view of the crowd that let out another gasp. Mia could see from the box that he had missed the stab. The man on the ground nodded. Then, he closed his eyes and slumped to his side. The attacker pulled his blade out of the sand and held it over his head. The crowd cheered, thinking they had just witnessed the kill. As they hauled the last man away, the winner lifted his bright white eyes on the box. She expected him to look on them with green, but his eyes didn't change. The slits of his eyes were a little wider than the other Tharloins. His skin was a little darker blue than others she had seen. Mia wondered if that was from days of fighting bare chested in the sun. He looked the women over. His eyes lighted on Mia.

She wanted to look away in fear, but her eyes were drawn to him and she couldn't seem to look away at all. He nodded and pointed at her as he dropped his weapon. An attendant pulled her chain and handed her over the railing. The crowd cheered. The warrior took her chain in his fist without a word and led her away AUTHOR'S NOTE: This is a 8,000 words stand-alone story with an HEA, so no cliff-hangers!
