Self-care and Case Management in Long-term Conditions: The Effective Management of Critical Interfaces Report for the National Institute for Health Research Service Delivery and Organisation programme April 2010 David Challis, University of Manchester Jane Hughes, University of Manchester Kathryn Berzins, University of Manchester

Improving outcomes for the growing number of people living with long-term conditions, while managing a rising demand for health services, is a challenge faced both by physicians and policymakers across health systems in developed countries.

Optimising a person's medicines is important to ensure a person is taking their medicines as intended and can support the management of long-term conditions, multimorbidities and polypharmacy. Medicines optimisation is defined as 'a person-centred approach to safe and effective medicines use, to ensure people obtain the best possible outcomes from their medicines.'
