Human geography. Since 1945 human geography has contained five main divisions. The first four—economic, social, cultural, and political—reflect both the main areas of contemporary life and the social science disciplines with which geographers interact (i.e., economics, sociology, anthropology, and political science and international relations, respectively); the fifth is historical geography.

A landscape refers not just to a piece of scenery that can be viewed from some lookout point, but to a patch of land that has some sort of socially-created unity as a result of the behaviors people carry out on it, or the meanings they ascribe to it, or both. Cultural activity leaves traces -- deliberately or inadvertently -- on the landscape, which subsequent cultural activity has to cope with.
