Moby-Dick: Chapters 126-132 | SparkNotes

The idea that Ahab's quest for Moby Dick is an act of defiance toward God assuming that Ahab is omnipotent first occurs before Ahab is even introduced during Father Mapple's sermon. The lesson of the sermon, which concerns the story of Jonah and the whale, is to warn against the blasphemous idea that a ship can carry a man into regions where God does not reign.

Gregory Peck disliked his performance as Captain Ahab so much that even nearly 20 years later, he refused to give permission to Steven Spielberg to use a scene from Moby Dick (1956) in Jaws (1975). Spielberg's original idea was to introduce his star Robert Shaw sitting in a movie theater watching Moby Dick, laughing loudly at the screen. Gregory Peck did not object to appear in such a scene, but he objected that it was his Ahab performance, which he vehemently disliked, so he refused permission.
