Introduction to DiY/counterculture | Permanent Culture Now

Clyde Kluckhohn (1951) described culture as a 'design for living' held by the members of a particular society. To a large degree, culture determines how members of society think and feel: it directs their actions and defines their outlook on life. Culture defines accepted ways of behaving for members of society.

Despite this being the case, there is a gap in terms of a religious response to technology. In response to this, the aim of this article is to stimulate theological reflections with regard to living in a digital culture. This is achieved by raising theological questions in the hope that theology could take a proactive role in these discussions.
