nventing the Future is a timely and ambitious attempt to outline a broad programme for the left during a period of instability and crisis for neoliberal capitalism. However, he also argued that Inventing the Future and Paul Mason's PostCapitalism dispensed with ideas of humanism that, he claimed, should be central to a left-wing project: ‘these books have been treated uncritically despite the reappearance of anti-humanist thinking within the left. Humanism needs to be defended; or, as Orwell wrote, “the job of the thinking person is not to reject socialism but to make up his mind to humanise it”’. Inventing the Future: Postcapitalism and a World without Work (Nick Srnicek and Alex Williams, 2015) Inventing the Future boldly calls for the outright encouragement of a world without work. It’s a revolutionary and exciting concept from these American co-authors in a society both obsessed with and dependent on formal employment.
