This type of insurance can provide investment returns in the form of dividends in retirement, then a cash benefit upon death. A whole life insurance policy covers the insured for their whole life while simultaneously building cash value, and the cash value grows tax-deferred. The cost of a whole life insurance policy can increase as the policyholder grows older, with premiums peaking after age 80.

Life insurance is often used as an investment for retirement planning. Basic life insurance can be divided into two general categories, term insurance and whole life insurance. When you buy term insurance, you pay premiums in exchange for a death benefit over a specified period of time. This is the least expensive type of life insurance.

Should you use Life Insurance as an Investment?

Whole life insurance and other types of cash value insurance can be considered investments. Because whole life insurance is complicated and expensive, it isn't a good investment option for most life insurance shoppers. The main purpose of life insurance is to provide a financial safety net for your loved ones in the event that you die prematurely. That's why a term life insurance policy, which is affordable and straightforward, is the right choice for most shoppers.
