This site is for anyone who wants to watch mammals in the wild. Mammalwatching is considerably easier than many people imagine. And, in large part because of the community who have contributed to this site, it is now possible to see more of the world's mammals in the wild than ever before.

Some of the non-threatened mammal species includes the nilgai, red fox and wild boar, bird species of Alexandrine parakeet, barn owl, black kite, myna, hoopoe, Indian peafowl, Indian leopard, red-vented bulbul, rock pigeon, shelduck and shikra, reptile species of Indian cobra, Indian star tortoise, Sindh krait and yellow monitor and amphibian species of Indus Valley bullfrog and Indus Valley toad.

Several species have been described as extremely rare or occurring in very small population on the borders of Pakistan, and of these, the cheetah (Acinonyx jubatus), Indian wild ass (Equus hemionus khur) and hangul (Cervus elaphus hanglu) are already regarded as being extinct in Pakistan (NCCW, 1978). Many other species like Indus dolphin, grey wolf, snow leopard, brown bear, Suleman markhor, lynx, Marco Polo sheep, etc. are among some of the threatened mammals in Pakistan.
