The Illuminations of Hannah Arendt - The New York Times

Hannah Arendt is well known for her reflections on totalitarianism, the rise of the social and the problem of evil. Yet, she also deeply admired exemplary individuals who acted with integrity. In Men in Dark Times (1968), Arendt wrote about individuals such as Karl Jaspers, Walter Benjamin and above all, Gottfried Lessing.

Men in Dark Times. "Dark times" is Brecht's phrase, and Hannah Arendt uses it not to suggest that those she writes about are "mouthpieces of the Zeitgeist" (none in fact fit such roles), but, rather, that the routine repetitive horrors of our century form the substance of the dark against which their lives of illumination were lived.

Between the World and Us: Hannah Arendt on Outsiderdom ...

Each of Hannah Arendt's essays, each a model of clarity, weight, gravity, sustained force and form, each superbly centered on the moods, manners, works, and "dark times" of ten exemplary men and women--"how they lived their lives, how they moved in the world"--become perhaps most rewarding when the author extends the boundaries of her discussions and consciously (sometimes unconsciously) looks for symmetries of thought and feeling, the archetypal rather than the topical.
