Farmington Mine Disaster

Ninety-nine Americans were working in the No. 9 coal mine just north of Farmington, W.Va., on the morning of Nov. 20, 1968 — but only 21 would return safely to loved ones and the light of day. And of the 78 individuals that died from the coal mine explosion, or by suffocation from the toxic levels of gases present afterwards, 19 would remain forever buried in the mine.

The Consol No. 9 Mine, Mountaineer Coal Company, Division of Consolidation Coal Company, Farmington, Marion County, WV, was permanently sealed on November 1, 1978. The Closure Orders issued on the entire mine on November 20, 1968, remain in effect. Listing of the victims of the No. 9 mine: A detailed list of the fatalities can be downloaded here.
