Pannus is more closely connected with the prosthetic surface, so its removal is related to a greater risk of mechanical valve damage. Studies report good results of pannus removal, instead of prosthesis reimplantation. Song et al. also described positive effects of pannus removal after mitral valve ring annuloplasty. However, we have not found any case involving the removal of both pannus and thrombus from an aortic prosthesis.

The treatment for specific areas of excess fat that are resistant to diet and exercise is possibly liposuction contouring of these problem areas. The treatment for loose skin resulting from weight gain followed by weight loss is skin excision and tightening,
