A certified paraoptometric technician (CPOT) is a professional who has attained national recognition by certification that they possess the abilities to understand, apply and interrelate fundamental concepts in optometric care. A CPOT works under the direct supervision of an optometrist in most cases.

"Paraoptometric certification is a measure that proves that optometric staff have attained a standard level of knowledge to provide patient care," Mrs. Franklin says. Also, certification "requires them to continue to expand on their competency, which is an integral part of providing a higher level of patient care."
