Harnessing the positive Power of Peers. We know the influence that young Londoners peer networks and friendship groups can have. We also know that we need to do more to acknowledge this and work more effectively with these groups. Here, Organisational Lead for Violence and Exploitation, Carly Adams Elias who oversees our Peers strand, discusses the key findings of a piece of research that we commissioned, that looks at peer groups through the lens of practice and what our next steps are.

Peer-to-Peer is a book about an emerging idea. That idea is that the traditional model of participating in the Internet, in which a small computer operated by an everyday user (a "client") asks for and receives information from a big computer administered by a corporation or other large entity (a "server"), is beginning to give some ground to a new (new to the fringes of the Internet, anyway) model called peer-to-peer networking.

Description. We'll be joined by Frank Barreca from Peer Tutor, to look at evidence-based research for interventions commonly used to raise learner attainment. Extra-curricular tutoring outside of the classroom has always proven advantageous for learners, however the cost associated with private tuition is often out of reach for many. This webinar will explore the concept of peer-to-peer tutoring and how technology can widen the appeal and make its benefits accessible to everyone.
