If "utopia in the postmodern era has largely fixed its new location in the solitary, private individual body" (2000: 34), then for young adult reading, dystopian fiction presents a utopian experience, especially with a first-person narrative, as the reader embodies the protagonist and conquers obstacles while they do, feeling strong heroic and accomplished.

The analysis of Ray Bradbury's dystopian novel, Fahrenheit 451, shows that literature as books, education and alike is abused and criminalized in the hero's reality, who is Guy Montag. The novel's setting is when new things seem to have totally replaced literature, fire fighters set flames instead of putting them out, the ownership of books is deserving of the law and to restrict the ...
