In the accompanying article on the psychology of auto racing, Shaun Tyrance, Ph.D., refers to the fate of British racing driver Dan Wheldon to exemplify the danger of the sport. Wheldon, the 2005 winner of IndyCar series and winner of the Indianapolis 500 in both 2005 and 2011, died Oct. 16, 2011 at age 33 from injuries suffered in a collision at the 2011 IZOD IndyCar World Championship in Las Vegas.

Motor racing is one of the most physically and mentally challenging of all sports, not only for racing drivers themselves, but also for the teams that play an integral role in the eventual performance of the car. It is my belief that, for such a demanding and popular sport, sports medicine is seriously underused.
