When leadership development is aligned with business strategy, organizations are able to link their investments in supporting potential leaders—such as internal training programs or tuition reimbursements—to broader goals and strategic plans. Such alignment increases the likelihood that your manager and other stakeholders within the organization will give your personal leadership plan the stamp of approval.

Strategy leadership involves decision-making aimed at shaping the direction of the organization. In a school, creating strategy takes time, three to five years and beyond. Strategy also includes considering broader core issues and themes for development in the school, instead of day-to-day issues.

Education systems must have a powerful and coherent educational improvement strategy in order to improve student academic achievement (Childress, Elmore & Grossman, 2006; Childress, Elmore, Grossman & Johnson, 2007). The strategic management of human capital and the education system's educational improvement strategy are inextricably linked.

Strategic leadership is aimed at finding a balance between the long-term focus of styles, such as transformational leadership, and the short-term focused style of transactional leadership. The aim is to integrate the short-term decisions, which are a necessary part of any organization and its decision-making, with the far-reaching outlook.
