Teaching for God's Glory is a daily inspirational and practical guide for new teachers starting out in education. Each day there is an inspirational Bible verse or quote for reflection as well as advice from veteran master teachers all across the country. Approaches to acclimating students to a new classroom at the beginning of a school year were studied. The beliefs and practices of master classroom managers were determined through the use of the Attitudes and Beliefs on Classroom Control (ABCC) survey, interviews, observations of classroom interactions, and recorded verbal interactions between teachers and students. The ABCC's three subscales address the areas of instructional management; people management; and behavior management. Scores in each subscale as well as full-scale scores place teachers in one of three paradigms: Non-Interventionist, Interactionalist, and Interventionist. The survey results indicated master teachers do hold similar beliefs about classroom management as full-scale scores placed all teachers in the same paradigm. Interviews, observations, and recorded interactions with students revealed the teachers employed common means of familiarizing incoming students to their classrooms. From transcriptions of interactions and observations, themes of rules, procedures, responsibility, respect, and relationships were identified. Teachers in the study spent substantial time teaching rules and procedures during the first weeks of school. They helped students become responsible for behavior and learning. Teachers showed respect toward students through words and actions, and helped students demonstrate respect toward adults and peers. Teachers took time to build positive relationships with individual students in their classes. Findings from the study may assist faculty working with preservice teachers and mentors assisting inservice teachers struggling with classroom management. Theme areas found in the study can be addressed in preservice programs, and in workshops or seminars for inservice teachers.

In this monograph, common problems faced by beginning teachers are discussed. These include: (1) encountering the unexpected demands of teaching in the familiar framework of the classroom; (2) understanding the role of the teacher in dealing with students; (3) communicating effectively with parents; (4) achieving a clear perspective on the authority and responsibilities of the principal; (5) establishing a sound rapport with other teachers; and (6) applying instructional skills to a specific curriculum. Suggestions are made on what the new teacher can do when faced with these problems, how the school can provide support for the new teacher, and what teacher education institutions can do to prepare students for the first year of teaching. (JD)
