The Kumulipo, a Hawaiian creation chant, depicts the power of the cosmos erupting into motion and heat that causes natural elements to inspire creation as evolving out of the night by the gradual accumulation of life forms. Beginning with the coral polyp in the first wā or era, the Kumulipo announces the existence of the whale in the second wā.

The Kumulipo appears central to Hawaiian spirituality. It originated as a creation and genealogical chant of the Hawaiian royal family. This chant was probably recited to Lono (Captain Cook) while a pig was sacrificed and offered to him at the Hikiau heiau, at Kealakekua Bay on Big Island.
