Horses, minis and ponies need at least 1-1.5 pounds of hay or pasture (on dry matter basis) per 100 pounds of body weight every day. For example: a 300--pound miniature horse needs at least 3-4.5 pounds of hay per day or 9-13.5 pounds of pasture (fresh grass is much higher in water content) per day.

A British Miniature Horse should be a perfectly scaled down version of a quality riding horse. At maturity it should measure not more than 87cm (34 inches) at the withers. We do not seek to miniaturise any particular breed, but would give as a guide to type, somewhere between a Hack and a Hunter as being the correct height to weight ratio.

According to the American Miniature Horse Association, the initial purchase price of your mini can be anywhere from $1,000 - $200,000! The price varies depending on age, pedigree, conformation, and training level. Even though miniature horses are smaller than standard-sized horses, they require many of the same monthly expenses.

The prototype of the Miniature Horse was strictly a mine worker until the 1950s and 1960s, when horses became obsolete in mining. About this time, however, the concept of a tiny horse became attractive to horse breeders. Not a pony, a miniature horse. The Miniature Horse would have the proportions of a light horse breed, just scaled down.

Miniature horses that are pasture pets may not need grains at all, just a well balanced vitamin and mineral supplement, or feed balancer for your area. A typical diet I feed my active show miniatures that weigh an average of 200 pounds is: one pound of low molasses 14% concentrate, a vitamin/mineral supplement, 1 pound of alfalfa, twice daily, access to a trace mineral block, and dry lot turn out.
