Inspired by the work of the Swiss linguist Ferdinand de Saussure, postmodernists claim that language is semantically self-contained, or self-referential: the meaning of a word is not a static thing in the world or even an idea in the mind but rather a range of contrasts and differences with the meanings of other words. Because meanings are in this sense functions of other meanings—which themselves are functions of other meanings, and so on—they are never fully "present" to the ...

It is like a documentary of the history of capitalism and Marxism based on various points of views throughout the years. His originality stems from his understanding of the concepts of space and time as not something static, but dynamically changing by means of materially shifted conditions.
