Social marketing involves skills in health, nutrition, advertising, marketing, social research, and evaluation to address common problems of at-risk behavior in public health and nutrition. This how-to, step-by-step guide is geared to program managers and decision makers. 7 units are devoted to determining the feasibility of the project, planning research and data collection techniques, setting behavior change objectives, communications strategy, product and services marketing, managing projects and formative and summative evaluation. Each unit presents an overview statement, the expertise required, technical terms, a general discussion, questions for study and discussion, and references. Unit 1 stresses the necessity of assessing whether the health problem will be affected by a social marketing intervention and of developing a work plan for the 5 stages of interventions planning research, developing a campaign strategy, prerequisite training and networking activities, and summative evaluation. In unit 2, a table provides a useful reference guide of research tools. Distinctions are made among planning research, formative research, and summative evaluation. Planning research can help define campaign goals and objectives. In unit 3, the process of establishing behavior change objectives for social marketing interventions is described: identifying and analyzing practices important to the health related behavior of the target community, understanding the constraints of costs involved, and applying commercial marketing techniques of concept testing and product trials. Objectives might be purchase and use, access and compliance, and/or skill and adherence. The criteria for an effective social marketing message is presented in unit 4. In unit 5, the product, price, place of distribution, and promotion are discussed. Management issues in unit 6 involve resource allocation, institutions program design, and program implementation. Formative evaluation, discussed in unit 7, is the process used to inform health professionals about how to improve existing projects; the summative evaluation is an assessment of the extent to which desired outcomes are achieved. This expertise required is knowledge of quantitative and qualitative data collection techniques, experimental design, research methodology, and materials development.

Focuses on the inter-relationship between reading, writing and speaking and listening. This work blends theory, research and practice to show how an integrated programme of work can be developed to ensure that literacy is taught in a vibrant and stimulating way. It also examines strategies for developing successful group work.

The Darfur conflict exploded in early 2003 when two rebel groups, the Sudan Liberation Movement and the Justice and Equality Movement, struck national military installations in Darfur to send a hard-hitting message of resentment over the region's political and economic marginalization. The conflict devastated the region's economy, shredded its fragile social fabric, and drove millions of people from their homes. Darfur Allegory is a dispatch from the humanitarian crisis that explains the historical and ethnographic background to competing narratives that have informed international responses. At the heart of the book is Sudanese anthropologist Rogaia Abusharaf's critique of the pseudoscientific notions of race and ethnicity that posit divisions between "Arab" northerners and "African" Darfuris. Elaborated in colonial times and enshrined in policy afterwards, such binary categories have been adopted by the media to explain the civil war in Darfur. The narratives that circulate internationally are thus highly fraught and cover over—to counterproductive effect—forms of Darfurian activism that have emerged in the conflict's wake. Darfur Allegory marries the analytical precision of a committed anthropologist with an insider's view of Sudanese politics at home and in the diaspora, laying bare the power of words to heal or perpetuate civil conflict.

This ebook reports on the unprecedented and radical step taken by Warwickshire Social Services Department when, in 1986, it closed the last of its children's homes. This book examines the background to these developments, the reasons for them and their consequences. The findings are set in the context of the crisis of confidence in residential child care that occurred in the early 1990's culminating in the Pindown Report on Staffordshire which revealed an alarming catalogue of inhuman and degrading treatment of children in residential care. This research, undertaken by NCB, reports findings that have major national and international significance. The future role of children's homes is in question and this study examines whether foster care, in particular, is more effective at meeting children's needs than residential care. Young people's own views are included and the work is presented very much in the context of the Children Act 1989.
