Patrick F. Wallace, former Director of the National Museum of Ireland, and Chief Archaeologist for the Dublin Wood Quay excavations—the largest excavations ever conducted in Ireland, and the largest urban excavations ever undertaken in the whole of Europe—has produced a remarkably lucid and comprehensive account of his career-crowning work in Viking Dublin: The Wood Quay Excavations.

On 23 September 1978, the famous ‘Save Wood Quay’ protest march took place in Dublin city: c. 20,000 people took to the streets in an extraordinary show of public sentiment that is still firmly lodged in the collective memory today. At issue was the decision by Dublin Corporation...

Located in the heart of the city in Dublin City Council Civic Offices, Wood Quay, City Wall Space is a conference, meeting, exhibition and performance facility featuring a stretch of the original Hiberno Norse (Viking) City Wall dating from 1100AD.

No less than two Viking settlements have been uncovered in the city, one at Wood Quay and the other at Christ Church Cathedral; originally a Celtic Christian church founded circa 1028. Vikings ruled with an iron fist for almost three centuries, before finally being defeated in 1014 by the Irish High King Brian Boru in the Battle of Clontarf.

Wood Quay Venue Wood Quay Venue is a spectacular state-of-the-art conference/meeting/exhibition/performance facility featuring a stretch of the original Hiberno Norse (Viking) City Wall dating from 1100AD. Located in the heart of the city in Dublin City Council Civic Offices, Wood Quay, Dublin 8.

Buried beneath the present-day city of Dublin was the original Viking settlement from the ninth or tenth century, in an extraordinary state of preservation: houses, undecayed wood, domestic furniture, jewelry, toys, tools, works of art, coins, plots, paths, a veritable map of the medieval town.

Although this highly-publicized protest failed to "Save Wood Quay," it did force the most extensive urban excavations ever undertaken in Europe that yielded more unprecedented data about town layout in Dublin 1,000 years ago than about any other European Viking town of the time.
